A PROSPECTUS.

For the establishment of a review, to be published in the city of New-Orleans, and similtoneously, in the other principal cities of the Southern States and in Texas; to be called

THE next session of Mathews Academy, will begin on Monday the 11th of January 1841. The buildings have lately undergone repairs, and are now in good order to receive a large number of pupils. The Trustees have employed three teachers besides the Rector, to give instruction in all the branches of an academical education. Boys are prepared either for the College or Counting Room, as parents or guardians may direct. The morals of the pupils committed to the Rector's charge will be carefully watched.

Jackson, where the Academy is situated, is connected by rail-road with the Mississippi River, affording every facility to persons wishing to visitate place. It presents opportunities for the education of families not equalled in the Southern country. The College of Louisiana, one of the oldest literary institutions in the State, is situated here; besides which there are several Female Sem inaries in successful operation. Eastern, and Middle States are all represented by some work similar to the one proposed, in which their principles are openly avowed—their literary taste and productions constantly exhibited, & their institutions boldly and fearlessly defended. And Woodville, Dec. 3rd 1840.

The Quarterlies of the Northern States, are, without exception, Abolition Reviews. Their most powerful writers are constantly engaged in propagating opinions on a subject vital to the interests, well-being, agriculture and commerce of the North, if persisted in, will not only be ruinous to this section of the country, but destructive of the American Union, and that too before the present generation has passed off the stage. In order to meet this hostile array of talent and fanatacism, which are gradually undermining our institutions and tending surely and directly to results the most disastrous, a work of the kind proposed, seems indisastrous, a serious disastrous, a work of the kind proposed, seems indisastrous.

Orthography, Composition, Letter-writing, Drawing Maps, Vocal Musie, Study of Sacred History, and Calisthenics, will be attended to through the course.

Regular bills will be kept by the teachers, who will mark the recitations, and deportment of each pupil. At the close of each session the marks will be transferred, to a book so that the parents may know the standing of their children while at the Academy. Those who go through the whole course will be rewarded by a certificate from the Institution. Each pupit will be examined on entering and classed accordingly. TERMS.

The expenses of the publication of such a work at the South, being double those of its publication at the North, it cannot be afforded at a less amount than TEN DOLLARS annually, which will be always expected to be paid in advance—that is, upon the delivery of the first number of each year. Each number will contain at least two hundred and fifty octave pages, printed on the finest paper and in the very best style of the American Press, and will range from that minimum to four hundred pages quarterly. Accepted articles will, in all cases, be paid for at the rate of two dellars for the printed page. The work will be commenced as soon as two thousand responsible subscribers are obtained; and as efficient means will be immediately employed to secure this amount of patronege, the publication of the work may be expected at an early day.
